Towson University Department of Nursing
Notice of Possible Implications of Criminal Convictions

The laws in all states require that persons practicing nursing be licensed as a condition to performing the duties and responsibilities of the occupation. These laws generally permit a licensing board or agency to deny a license or to revoke, or suspend a license or to reprimand a licensee if they are convicted or plead guilty or nolo contendere to a felony or other specified crime. In the event you have a criminal record, the University urges that you timely inquire of the applicable state licensing authority of the effects if any, of your criminal record on eligibility for licensure before you make your decision to apply for or to accept admission to the University in the Nursing program.

The Nursing program also requires that you successfully complete certain clinical courses. These courses are generally offered at off-campus sites including hospitals or other institutional settings that are not part of the University. These clinical sites may require that you disclose whether you have a criminal record or that you submit to a criminal background investigation, as a condition of your participation in the clinical experience. The University shall have no obligation either to refund your tuition, or to otherwise accommodate you in the event your criminal record renders you ineligible to complete required clinical courses.

“I acknowledge that I have read the above paragraphs relating to the possible consequences of having a criminal record, and that I understand the effects a criminal record may have upon my eligibility to complete the requirements of my major and my eligibility for licensure.”
