

Academic Senate Constitution and By-Laws

(approved by the University Senate 11/5/2018; approved by the Towson University faculty electorate 3/8/2019)

PREAMBLE

The principle of shared governance, the process by which various constituents of a university contribute to decision making related to university policy and procedure, has been advocated by the American Association of University of Professors since 1966. In 2016 the Association of Governing Boards of Universities and Colleges (AGB) reiterated the importance of shared responsibility for the work of the university: “The fundamental principles and practice of shared governance in higher education are essential to the health, vitality, and future of America’s colleges and universities.” As the AGB notes, “When done well, shared governance strengthens the quality of leadership and decision making at an institution, enhances its ability to achieve its vision and to meet strategic goals, and increases the odds that the very best thinking by all parties to shared governance is brought to bear on institutional challenges. When done well, shared governance engenders an institutional culture of collective ownership and accountability for the institution’s present and future.”¹

The central mission of the University is the advancement of learning in all of its forms: to generate, communicate, and conserve knowledge, as well as to encourage a critical awareness of the world around us. Faculty bring to this mission a unique scholarly and pedagogical expertise, acquired and maintained by means of extensive professional training and experience, as well as active and ongoing teaching and research that contributes to their respective fields of knowledge. They are accordingly charged by the university with unique scholarly and pedagogical responsibilities. Faculty are responsible for academic standards. Hence all degrees are conferred “on recommendation of the faculty.” As such, faculty must play a primary and critical role in guiding the academic mission of the University. Therefore, in accordance with the University System of Maryland policy on shared governance (I.600: <http://www.usmd.edu/regents/bylaws/SectionI/I600.html>), the Academic Senate shall meet and serve as a primary policy-shaping body of the University as well as the academic community's primary advisory body to the President.

This Academic Senate Constitution outlines lines of authority and responsibility for the shared governance of Towson University.

The authority afforded by shared governance policies means that the Academic Senate shall be held accountable to the strategic missions of Towson University and the University System of Maryland. The work of the Academic Senate and of those who serve on it comprises a significant, serious responsibility. The Academic Senate must be responsive to the strategic mission and plan of the university and together with the University Administration should work toward outcomes that support the mission. Likewise, the Academic Senate should have substantive input into any changes or revisions to the strategic mission and plan of the university.

A. RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE ACADEMIC SENATE

While this document establishes the functions and responsibilities of the University Academic Senate to steer policy, it also affirms that the ultimate promulgation of policy or veto resides in the Office of the President of the University. Nonetheless, presumption should be accorded to all Academic Senate recommendations. Should a Presidential veto occur, the President shall report all reasons for a veto to the Academic Senate in a timely fashion. Moreover, the Academic Senate shall report to the campus community any Administrative veto of policy or procedure recommended by the Academic Senate; any failure to enact a recommendation; or any action taken contrary to Senate recommendation, provided the recommendation falls under the purview of the academic affairs of the university (in accordance with USM policy I.600).

The Academic Senate shall have representation in all major taskforces and committees at the university. Such taskforces and committees must include an Academic Senate representative, nominated by the Senate chair and approved by a majority of the Executive Committee of the Academic Senate.
