Dear International Students:

On Friday, January 27, 2017, President Trump announced new restrictions on immigration to the United States by citizens of Iran, Iraq, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria and Yemen. The Executive Order has been both confusing and disturbing and created much concern for our students and the TU community.

Students should know that The International Student and Scholar Office (ISSO) is committed to embracing and serving all members of our community, and maintaining a welcoming environment for our students, faculty and staff from around the world. We are in constant contact with immigration experts, colleagues at other institutions and national associations to better understand all implications of the new policies and its direct impact on some members of our TU community.

We are working to provide information and resources to members of TU, and will rigorously support, by any means available to us, any student or faculty member who may be threatened by this or other changes to existing immigration regulations. Please visit our website for information as it becomes available. For the immediate future, we urge any members of the TU community who are citizens of the seven designated countries, and who are currently in the United States to avoid international travel as we continue to monitor these events.

We would like to remind students who may be expressing stress and anxiety during these events to contact our colleagues at the University Counseling Center for help and support. The immigration advisors in our office are also available to speak with students with general concerns or specific immigration questions.

Best Regards,

ISSO Staff
