This course will explore feminist approaches in human geographies, as well as physical geographies and geospatial technologies.

We will:

• Examine how space and place are constructed through the dominant influences of patriarchy, masculism, whiteness, & heteronormativity

• Challenge ourselves to seek out and honour alternative and marginalized sources of knowledge

• Learn from and imagine non-dominant forms of society and space

‘I am not willing to get over histories that are not over. I am not willing to be included if inclusion means being included in a system that is unjust, violent, and unequal. I am willing to reject or to widen the scripts available for what counts as a good life.’
