I’ve recently had the opportunity to teach a course called Second Language Literacy. Teachers have enrolled in the course claiming that they were seeing more and more students in their classrooms for whom English is a second language. In this course, the graduate students learn about theories and methods for meeting the specific needs of second language learners. In the course, we unlock mysteries and reveal literacy acquisition and learning for second language students.

As they journey through the semester, the graduate students learn that these second language learners are not some strange beings. From a broader perspective, these students are just a little different from the English speaking students who, of course, are all different from each other in the way they learn, interact, crack jokes, tell stories and enrich the classroom. At some point, the graduate students realize that with focused and differentiated instruction attending to social, cultural, cognitive and linguistic dimensions of language and literacy learning, the second language students can be brought successfully into the regular classroom to learn, interact, crack jokes, tell stories and further enrich all of our lives.

It is with this latter realization that many graduate students realize something even more profound. They should probably be differentiating more for all of their students because they are all social, cultural, cognitive and linguistic beings. Differentiation can be one of those buzz words, one of those in-service workshops, one of those feel-good terms that everyone embraces while too few make changes to their teaching habits. In truth, I’ve never read an article or book specifically about differentiation. I’ve never attended a conference session or workshop about it. But I embrace the idea because it makes sense to me as a reading teacher.

As future Reading Specialists, traveling through the Towson University Graduate Reading Program, you learn theory, research, and practice; you learn diagnostic assessment and follow-up teaching; you learn individual and group instruction strategies; you learn about literature, media and technology integration. You learn that an effective reading teacher and specialist sees the social, cultural, cognitive and linguistic in each and every learner. You learn to see each learner as an individual and as a participant in something bigger and, as yet, not fully realized.

In these times when mandated, narrow curricula and even scripted teaching have established a firm grip on many of us, you will do well to embrace all that the Graduate Reading Program offers and put it into practice for the many different learners you encounter.

Steve Mogge
A Sequence of Second Language Electives

The Maryland Teacher Staffing Report of 2006-2008 states that all 24 local school systems have a shortage of ESOL teachers. The Graduate Reading Program is happy to announce that it has established a sequence of elective courses designed to prepare graduate students to meet the needs of ESOL learners and prepare for the Praxis-II ESOL Certification.

REED 670, Assessment and Instruction for English Language Learners will be offered by Dr. Martinez in the Summer Semester, 2007. The course will provide students with the necessary research-based skills and information they need to understand how to work with English Language Learners.

REED 670, Introduction to Linguistics for Language and Literacy Educators will be offered by Dr. Altwerger in the Fall Semester, 2007.

REED 730, Second Language Literacy has been offered twice and will be offered again by Dr. Mogge in the Spring Semester, 2008. Again, the combination of these courses will prepare students for the Praxis-II ESOL exam. We are also looking into the possibility of a study abroad, Spanish language immersion experience for the Summer Semester, 2008. Stay tuned. Costa Rica, anyone!?

Required Portfolio Contents

The portfolio must include (but is not limited to) the following items:

REED 601:
- Autobiography
- Models Presentation Handout

REED 609:
- Informal Assessment Reports
- Comparison of Test Results
- Survey of School Literacy Assmt.

REED 621:
- Focused Case Study
- Disabled Reader or Metacognitive/Cognitive Processing Paper

REED 626:
- Final Case Report
- Memo to Parents

REED 663:
- Research Based Instructional Project
- Text Set

REED 665:
- Cross-curriculum Project
- Mini Case Study

REED 726:
- Reflections on Paraprofessional or Peer Coaching
- Parent Workshop Materials

REED 729:
- Seminar Research Paper
- Paper Presentation
- Reflective Essay

It is recommended that students keep an electronic backup of all course work. It is now required that students create both an electronic copy and a hard copy of the Portfolio. The electronic copy will be kept for our files. The hard copy of your portfolio must be presented at the Portfolio Gala held each semester. After it has been reviewed, it will be returned to you for your personal use. Be sure that the portfolio is fully complete upon turning it in.

Course Highlights

REED 745: Professional Development in Reading

Dr. Sharon Pitcher

The International Reading Association has identified “coaching” as one of its “hottest” topics and areas of concern. Would you like to learn more about how to lead school-wide literacy curriculum and how to guide classroom teachers to deliver best literacy practices? Take this course in the Fall Semester, 2007.

REED 632: Improving Literacy of Students with Language-Learning Disabilities

Terri Ricigliano & Susan Manocchia

This Summer 2007 course examines the characteristics of adolescents and adults with language-learning disabilities, how to identify their needs for literacy improvement, and how to design and implement an individualized program for literacy development.

*These courses are part of the Towson Summer Symposium on the Integration of Reading and Technology (TSSIRT). TSSIRT will be held June 25-July 10, with all classes held on-line on June 29 and no classes July 4. During these 11 days students may take one course to earn three credits or two courses to earn six. The Lunch Forum is an integral part to TSSIRT and will be required of all students. Time for the forum is created by borrowing an hour from both the morning and afternoon courses, making them three hours each rather than the necessary four hours. This forum focuses on issues related to teaching, literacy and technology that are presented through readings and guest speakers. Students are welcome to eat lunch during this Forum.

Paid Internship Opportunity

Wediko Children's Services is a non-profit agency with over 70 years of experience dedicated to children and adolescents whose learning, social development and self-direction are lagging. The summer program is held at a scenic 450 acre lakeside camp 100 miles north of Boston in the Monadnock region of New Hampshire.

Positions: residential counselors, special education assistants and activity assistants. Supervision and training are provided throughout the program by clinical psychologists, social workers, special education professionals and licensed nurses.

Qualifications: Previous experience with children or adolescents is not a requirement. Personal qualities such as the abilities to work hard, work on a team, be flexible and use constructive feedback are important. The program values individual qualities over experience, hoping to offer students a "foot in the door" to their careers.

Job dates: June 27-August 23. Staff are required to participate in lectures and case conferences during two weeks of orientation.

Benefits: Paid positions, 750 hours of supervised therapeutic experience and training. Room & Board, 6 days off during the 8 week internship.
