At least once a year the Towson University Police Department (TUPD) is alerted to an Internet based scam. These come in many forms and are constantly being revised by the criminal element to make them appear legitimate. They may be employment scams, dating scams, inheritance scams and many others. Victims are not limited to students. We have seen staff members also victimized. The most common scams involve a check being sent to you for deposit. The check may originally appear legitimate to even trained bank personnel. This is because the checks are counterfeit and are using real bank account information. You are generally sent the check quickly and pressed to deposit it. You are pressured to use the funds to issue money orders, bank checks, or even wire transfer part of the funds. The offer of making a fair amount of money for little time and effort is a tactic used by these criminals. Most of them are organized out of this country and very difficult to trace and prosecute. Unsolicited emails offering employment should put you on high alert. They are almost always scams. As a rule remember, if its sounds too good, it probably is (a scam). The following link may help answer some questions. There are many more sites with information. If you have questions, search the Internet using key words like employment scams, check scams, and dating scams. Be alert, these criminals spend an enormous amount of time on these scams. They only need a low percentage to succeed to be successful. Dependent on how they are accomplished, it could wind up costing you thousands of dollars. If you don’t know
